September 10, 2003 • Kossiakoff Center • Laurel, MD

Interagency Homeland Air Security National Capital Region Demonstration Industry Day

"We are in a war against terrorism and our part in that war is to help build the best air security system possible."

Rear Admiral Mike Mathis, USN
Director, Joint Theater Air & Missile Defense Organization (JTAMDO)

Opportunities Abound

The event will consist of a number of briefings, panel discussions, and poster sessions focused on conveying the government's desired capabilities and characteristics for Homeland Air Security. Industry will be offered the opportunity after the conference to submit "White Papers" describing their concepts and technologies as candidates for funding for demonstration and evaluation in the NCR. This conference will be held at the SECRET, US-only level.

Overview

The Joint Theater Air & Missile Defense Organization (JTAMDO), in support of the interagency homeland air security community and in cooperation with the National Defense Industrial Association, is pleased to announce an "Interagency Homeland Air Security (IHAS) National Capital Region (NCR) Demonstration" Industry Day. The purpose of the IHAS NCR Industry Day is to describe desired interagency capabilities and characteristics critical to the deterrence, prevention, or interdiction of aerial threats to the United States and to solicit industry for concepts and technologies to defeat terrorists from using air vehicles as a weapon to perpetrate attacks on the United States. JTAMDO has been funded through FY06 to conduct a series of demonstrations in the NCR where selected programs from Industry Day will be evaluated as solutions to capability needs.

The Interagency Homeland Security (IHAS) Team is made up of operational, policy, and senior management representatives from across the federal agencies. The IHAS team has been working over the past year and a half to address a host of issues, chief among them have been integration of military and law enforcement operations and air surveillance.
